TASK 2

The people below all want to get some information from an internet website. Read the eight educational sites and decide which website would be the most suitable for the five people. You can only choose one website per person. Write the website's letter (A-H) in the column.

		A-H
1	Rosie is 20 and studies Spanish and German. She's planning to spend six months at a German university and, before going, she wants to find out what life there is like for people of her age.
2	Eric is keen on teaching himself languages. He's going on holiday to Spain next year and would like to be able to say some simple things in the language when he gets there.
3	Claudia is learning about life among the ancient Romans. Her teacher has asked her to choose a famous Roman and find out as much as she can about him or her.
4	Ivan teaches history. He wants some information about the changes that have taken place since earliest times in the ways in which people exchange ideas.
5	Miriam wants to encourage her children to find out something about classical music. They need basic information but she also wants them to have some fun while they are learning.

Educational sites on the web

A Let's Communicate! If you're interested in how people share information and thoughts, you'll find this website useful. It begins over five thousand years ago with the writings of the ancient world. The inventions of printing and of sound recording are covered, and so is the development of the internet.	B Sights and Sounds This is for anyone studying the Latin language or who is interested in the ancient world. There are amazing facts about the rulers of ancient Rome, interactive family trees, the words of popular songs, and maps of battles.
C Mouth Piece Clear explanations, exercises and vocabulary games will help you revise your Spanish or even learn the language from the beginning. The pages cover a wide range, from "Irregular verbs" to "Cook in Spanish" and "Public speaking". There are useful links to other websites, providing historical and cultural information, including sites in Latin America.	D Speak Up This small but complete site aims to help language learners with the pronunciation of all the main sounds in German, with additional advice on spelling. This will be of use to students trying to teach themselves the language from the beginning, teaches preparing classes for beginners or parents looking for ways to encourage their children to develop basic language skills.
E Roman Games Nobody understands all the rules of games which were popular in ancient Rome. However, by exploring the social history of the period, the designers of this site have developed some interesting ideas for games which can be played in the playground or as board games or singing games.	F In the Air This is a young person's online guide to the orchestra. It describes each instrument, with a recording of its range of sounds, and gives a brief history of the instrument. It also explains how to make some amusing instruments at home using everyday objects.
G In Touch If you need to check on the facts, use this multilingual site to get all kinds of information about Spanish music, art and literature, history and politics, as well as useful lists of sites for those travelling to Spain.	H Oskar's Magazine This amusing and colourful magazine is designed for university students of German. These are interesting articles by young German writers on a range of subjects, from where to find cheap accommodation in Berlin to reviews of current dance music CDs and classical music concerts, and student-exchange experiences.

TASK 3

Read the text about a rock climbing trip. Look at the sentences 1-10 in the table and decide whether they are true or false.

CLIMBING TRIP by Samantha Davis

My dad and I have both done a bit of climbing at our local sports centre. So we decided to go on a trip together, climbing the high rocks along the coastline of a small island. Although it wasn't far from where we live, the journey across the sea took quite a long time – but it was worth it!

As we approached the island, Dad pointed out the rocks covered in colourful plants, wild goats and bees, which were once the only signs of life on this now popular place for visitors. The island has become well-known as a climbing venue and the ferry we took across to the island was full of climbers carrying boots and backpacks.

We arrived at the island's harbour, full of brightly-coloured houses lit by the early-morning sun. We were met by a driver in an ancient old car, arranged by the travel company we'd booked with. The driver took us to the tiny apartment, which, like the car, had seen better days, but it was comfortable and we weren't going to spend much time there anyway.

There are lots of possible climbs up the island's rocks, and not all of them have been discovered by climbers, but many have places clearly marked out so climbers can easily see where to put their hands and feet. All we needed were shoes, ropes and the equipment for attaching the rope to the rocks, although despite the markings on the rocks, I still had problems! Anyway, climbing is obviously not without risk, and things can still go wrong, but you're far less likely to get into difficulties on the island.

There was a wide range of climbers, both in ability and age, so there was no need for my previous worries about being the only teenager. Away from the rocks and back in the town, there was a very sociable atmosphere in the cafes, where we compared notes on what we'd achieved that day.

One day, our climbing destination was a rough cliff, with very little to put my hands and feet on. It was amazing how quickly I learnt to attach my rope onto the rock to avoid falling as I climbed! Then I realised the boy climbing next to me was someone I knew. We waved, smiled and moved on, although he seemed to find the rock far less of a challenge!

Once Dad and I were down at ground level again, we stopped at a beach, which was deserted. We walked along with our feet in the water and promised ourselves that it wouldn't be the last time that we sat on that stretch of beach.

		TRUE	FALSE
1	Samantha and her father travelled a great distance to the place where they went climbing.
2	The place where Samantha and her dad got off the boat was very cheerful-looking.
3	They were not excited with the accommodation and the transport provided.
4	There were still a number of climbing routes on the island waiting to be explored.
5	Samantha found her climb easy because the route she took had been prepared for climbers.
6	Samantha thinks the island is generally a safer climbing location than most others.
7	Samantha liked the fact that she could chat with people of her age after a day's climbing.
8	Samantha had difficulty with the technique of using the rope to make herself safe.
9	Samantha found climbing up the cliff harder than her friend from home did.
10	Samantha and her dad said they would return one day to the beach they found.
